

One in a series.....

Mystery shrub!

A small green Puzzle??

Earlier this spring I had wrongfully presumed that a small green glob of leaves along my back yard fence was just one of my many Salvia greggi's scattered parallel to it... until I actually stopped to take a serious look. Puzzlement now replaced that earlier smug off handed presumption and so ...down on my knees, it became more than apparent, that this was actually some kind of evergreen shrub ...with decidedly NO salvia look or similarity at all.

A smallish 15" wide and possibly pushing 6" tall, it is not a plant to quickly catch ones eye. Can't recall seeing any bloom last year (can't even recall noticing it last year). With all the odd places that I've ordered various plants from over the last few years, it could have as its origins from Tibet or maybe as far afield as South Africa... well most likely not South Africa. No tag around the plant (too easy) and no current thoughts, so I've dubbed it the Mystery Shrub!

CLOSE VIEW OF BRANCHING

TOP DOWN VIEW

